Social & Personal UN Observers Make Equivocal Mikeyan Grateful Report on Killing of Shepherd

DIFFICULT SEARCH The site of the incident was xamined on the morning of anuary 24, after a light rain ad fallen during the right. January 24, after a light rain had fallen during the right. Movement on this steeply aloping, rocky hillside proved difficult, the area is very difficult to search. There are few distinguishing features. The Israeli who had found the body of the dead shepherd on the previous day could not locate the exact spot again. The search of the area on the Israel side produced no physical evidency in the way of blood spots, indication of buillet strikes on rocks, or empty casings.

Neither the Israeli nor the Syrian complaints have referred to firing after about 23th bours on January 23, when the Israel shepherd was killed. There was, however, some firing later in the afternoon.

At 1530 hours, the U.N. obser-shepherd was killed. There was, however, some firing later in the aftermoon.

At 1520 hours, the U.N. observer, who carried out the investigation heard from Lehavot Habeshan several single shots and one short burse of fire from the east. Another U.N. observer, on duty at Observation Post 3 CMR. 2123 2866) heard at 1517 hours rifle and machine gun shots from the south and saw two persons running in a westerly direction downhill, taking cover. He heard intermittent firing until 1602 hours.

This firing apparently began who were searching for the missing shepherd reached the spot who were searching for the missing shepherd reached the spot where the body was stated that, at about 1516 hours, six or seven bursts and a few single shots were fired at their party (eight men searching in ine) when they reached tha pody. This firing, which appeared to come from the ridge to the east of them, had continued until 1565 hours whenever they moved. He stated they had not returned the fire. Another as I larsel witness has stated that firing had started suddenly—severa groups of shots. Arab villagers, and fire was returned.

The U.N. Military Observer on duty in Observation Post 4, on the Israel side (5,00 metres south of the area where the incident occurred), was topd by the Israel Liaison Officer at approximately 1315 hours local time that, being outside the post, he had just heard what sounded like a burst of automatic firing some distance to the north. One member of Kibbuts Lehavot Habashan to which the herd belongs and which is located 1,500 metres went of the area where the incident occurred stated that there was some firing east of the Kibbuts aid he also heard some shots at about the same time.

Another member of the Kibbuts and he also heard some shots at about the same time.

Border Police Adopt Village Kindergarten AFULA. — Members of the Jezreel Valley border police in a festive ceremony on Thursday adopted the kindergarten of Nir Yafeh and M'lea villages in the Ta'anach region. The policemen had cleared a field for a playground to serve both villages.

The unit also promised to LEAVE FOR PASTURE

Some members of the Kibbuts then started for the pasture (it was about 1330 hours according to a witness).
Part way up they met the herd and one of the shepherds, who stated that there had been shots, that he had taken cover and that he had not seen the other shepherd since then. A rapid search for the missing shepherd yielded no results.

Columbus Wrong, World's a Pear

Washington, — New data indicating the earth to be shaped le as like a sphere and more like a pear has been uncovered by U.S. scientists studying the orbital flights of the Vanguard experimental satellite.

Vanguard I, launched on March I7, 1985, and still orbiting around the earth, is expected to remain aloft at least 200 years. Results of findings on the earth's shape are being presented at the annual meeting of the Amgrican Physical Botiety in New York City. The data was complied by J. A. O'Keete, Ann Erksis and R. K. Squires of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (N.A.S.A.).

Scientists are interested in the shape of the earth hecause it yields information about the structure and strength of materials inside. An N.A.S.A. statement explains the findings of its three scientists. It says, "The new findings show that the sea level at the North Polar Cap is raised by about 30 feet. "In the Northern Hemisphere, outside the Polar Cap, the sea level is lower by about 80 feet. "In the Northern Hemisphere, outside the Polar Cap, the sea level is lower by about 35 feet (7.5 metres). Correspondingly, the region in the Southern Hemisphere outside the Polar Cap is raised by a similar amount. "The combined effects of these variations cause the earth to be slightly pear-shaped, with the more narrow end in the Arctic and the broad base in the Antarctic."

The old man (Spencer Tracy) has been fishing alone in a skiff in the Gulf Stream for 84 days without taking a fish. Then he sets out again and hooks a giant mariin and for three days and nights he struggles with the big fish and eventually brings it home, but in skeleton form: for the carcass is eaten by sharks. Yet this simple theme becomes a film drama which moves the spectator not only by what is implied — and wisely the director, John Sturges, lets Hemingway's actual text speak for litself (in narration form) — but also visually.

Tracy, although he is not the "thin, gaunt old man" of Hemingway's book, gets into the very spirit of the role of one who has attained true hurrility and will never be defeated. It is an outstanding performance.

But owing to the right of some of the members to exercise their veto, it is rare indeed for the Security Council to make an ity Council to make an significant pronouncement. Thus all that emerged was Mr. Cabot Lodge's excellent adjuration to both sides that they should fire only in obvious self-defence, apart from his recommendation that Israel should make use of the machinery of the Israel-Syrian Mixed Armistice Commission when such complaints arise.

Hedva Ben-Ami's Orpheus had a good general interpretation, came out well in the lower register but lacked power in her high notes: Lucy Arnon's sweet limpid singing was well suited to the part of Eurydice; and their voices were well blended in the duets. Both these singers had their early training in Haifa under Oreta Weiss-Hab. Pnina Gorali brought a dramatic sense and excellent diction to the part of Amor.

The diction generally was fore the killing brought reinforcements, but there is nothing to prevent the Syrians saying "they fired first." The fact that the Syrians have been shooting systematically for some months is not the business of the M.A.C. And although they are military men, it is not even their business to prevent the Syrians from shooting. It is merely to record the shootings, the deaths, and such other details as the location of spent cartridge cases as they may chance to pick up. This is useless, and often worse than useless, as any inquiry must be that gives equal weight to truth and falsehood because it declines on principle to estimate the credibility of witnesses and statements. And indeed the M.A.C. was never intended to carry out so onerous a task, but merely to administer the armistice for a few months until it evolved into a peace treaty.

This creates an impossible situation. It is a matter not only of the lives of a few, but of the morale of all the settlements on the frontier, Mr. Eban posed the three alternatives that emerge. The first of these to let the killing continue cannot be contemplated. There remains only the question of whether the Security Council will bring pressure to bear to stabilize the situation at least to the extent to which this has been done on the Gaza frontier, or whether it will drinking parties," but as it is worded it could be used to prohibit all meetings and gatherings (except those connected with church, schools, hospitals and clubs) at which an African, even an innocent bystander, is present.

The Minister points out that merely to han social meetings at the homes of people named in his draft proclamation would simply invite such people to hold their meetings at some other place, and therefore the only way to prevent them altogether is to enforce a general ban on mixed social gatherings.

ris), and his performance was up to his accustomed standard.

Abel Ehrlich (born in 1915) has had quite a number of his works recorded by Kol Yisrael, and the Israel Composers' Fund has commissioned him to write a work for orchestra which is being recorded at present, also by Kol Yisrael. His style is dominated by intellectual considerations, and in his grapping with the problems facing a modern composer in general, and in Israel especially, he does not take any easy way out. But here, in this "Slow Movement for Orchestra" (1958), one is at a loss to understand or appreciate the composer's writing, Most probably, this like other firsts, has to be heard repeatedly, but it seems doubtful to me whether it would gain with frequent hearing, as the colours are all dark in dark, and no musical material of interest is apparent.

Ravel's "Pavane" has been a favourite with the public since it was composed in 1899, and its usefulness as a bridge and as a fill-in was proven again in this programme. The reading was routine, as was the performance of the Corelli, but the conductor and the orchestra abtwed their proficiency in the never-failing "Polovisian Dances" by Bo ro d in (1833-1887), which was played with all the traditional blood and thunder and rendered with sparkling technical brilliancy bringing the eventual evening to a satisfactory close.

New Synagogues

The Community recently built two new synagogues. I only had time to visit the orthodox one, a luxurious building costing $300,000. There is a vast Community Hall with basketball and outdoor sports facilities, well-equipped separate milk and meat kitchens, many classrooms where Hebrew and religion are taught, and a Sunday School for little children. Two Rabbis and six teachers are on the staff. All this and the many activities and functions held at the Synagogue make a great demand on the generosity of the members. But there is time and money for serious work and support of everything connected with Israel.
